The adventurer and his pal with their colored valet manage to cook a good breakfast on the hot sands of the desert and are just about to take it easy after the heat when a sand storm blows up and gives them an awful death. It passes and they are left without water and are about dying. The adventurer has a vision of a beautiful lake of water and when he jumps in finds he is in a sand pit. His vision is of a bevy of beautiful girls dancing in a grove of palm trees. They run to greet them but when they are about to reach them the girls disappear. The adventurer leads them to a harem on the outskirts of the desert and they find romance and adventure.

The sheik's uncle is trying to put him out of the way so that he can succeed to the head of the harem and enlists the boys to help him accomplish his nefarious scheme. The boys readily agree but while they are acting as dancing girls and when the sheik they decide to turn the tables and give the sheik away. This puts them in soft with the sheik and he promises to give them their pick of the girls in the harem for wives.
